DownloadFull.A new species of Golden-winged Skipper from northern Mesoamerica (Lepidoptera: Hesperidae). A new species of Golden-winged Skipper, Hesperidae, (Lepidoptera) is described from northern Mesoamerica. Hesperidae are a large and diverse taxon of Holarctic Lepidoptera comprising more than half of all species of insects. The family is primarily characterized by having forewing venation composed of two divergent cells (the open and closed fusca cells, respectively) connected by a crossvein. Two genera, Scygnidae and Hesperidae, have species from southern and northern hemispheres, respectively. Hesperidae are mostly distributed in temperate regions of the Neotropic. The discovery of a Hesperidae species in tropical areas is particularly surprising, as tropical Hesperidae are generally a monophyletic group. We describe the new species on the basis of distribution and morphological and genetic evidence. A molecular phylogeny including the new species and related taxa shows that H. santacruzae sp. nov. constitutes a distinct group within the Hesperidae, and that it may have been separated from its sister taxon, H. thymbris, for roughly 3.4 Ma. Furthermore, the new species exhibits different and rather widespread distribution compared with other known Hesperidae of tropical areas. Our results highlight the need to expand the range of research in this taxon.Cleaning Service Melbourne for Industrial Complexes Swipe cleanflooring believe that your company might have had more, if not all, of the buildings built as industrial complexes. The very nature of this way of building is such that it requires what can only be described as intense cleaning. One problem with this is that people often completely neglect to realize that industrial buildings need cleanings, and they often neglect them because cleaning materials are in such short supply. One of the most important things about industrial cleaning is that it can often be thought of as a very predictable expense. When you are cleaning an industrial complex, you are aware that you are doing something which is a little out of
